Connections

Your CONNECTIONS measures how well you manage relationships and how well you work independently.

You're comfortable working on your own and enjoy projects that let you be autonomous. Because you're good at avoiding social distractions, you're able to stay focused on your work.

You are slightly more Direct than Diplomatic

You're concerned with other people's needs and try to deal with conflict fairly. You hear what other people have to say and are honest in your own opinions.

Direct — You — Diplomatic

On a good day you give clear and honest feedback

On a bad day you can find fault too easily

You succeed through

- being able to see two viewpoints
- getting your point across clearly
- listening to others

You are highly Autonomous

Top strength

You have a very clear idea about how things should be done. You enjoy having the independence to really be yourself and take control.

Autonomous — You — Supportive

On a good day you enjoy working independently

On a bad day you can focus too much on your own needs

You succeed through

- staying focused on your deliverables
- doing what you believe in
- playing your part

You are Emotive

You feel strongly about what you do, and that's evident in your attitude. It's an attitude that shows you care.

Emotive — You — Balanced

On a good day You are sensitive and care about things that matter to you

On a bad day you can be too passionate about your work

You succeed through

- caring about what you do
- getting fully involved
- being self-critical

You are slightly more Reserved than Sociable

Although comfortable on your own, you also feel at home among other people, whether they're colleagues or people you've only just met.

Reserved — You — Sociable

On a good day you avoid social distractions

On a bad day you feel uncomfortable in large team settings

You succeed through

- being comfortable around others
- your ability to avoid social distractions
- taking an interest in people

Creativity

Your CREATIVITY measures how original and innovative your thinking is, or how logical and analytical it is.

You value logic, so you prefer decisions that are based on reason rather than intuition. You're comfortable with rules and take an 'if it ain't broke ...' approach to getting things done.

You are highly Focused

Top strength

Far from being a daydreamer, you're very focused on what you need to do and don't like being distracted by complications.

Focused — Adaptable

You

On a good day you work best when delivering to a deadline

On a bad day you can get caught up in the detail

You succeed through

- your high levels of concentration
- your practical approach
- your appreciation of rules

You are slightly more Pragmatic than Innovative

You're good at coming up with ideas that are original but not far fetched. You believe innovation should be practical.

Pragmatic — Innovative

You

On a good day you thrive in familiar settings

On a bad day you avoid thinking outside the box

You succeed through

- using reasoning that may not be immediately obvious to others
- your results-based approach
- your openness to new solutions

You are highly Classical

Top strength

You have a clear and consistent way of working. You prefer the stability and security of conformity and tradition.

Classical — Open to Experience

You

On a good day you respectfully preserve traditions

On a bad day you tend to resist change

You succeed through

- your ability to keep things simple
- your pragmatic approach
- your conventionality

Drive

Your DRIVE measures your level of ambition.

You're living in the moment. This means you're happy with your current situation and don't obsess over your work. It also means you're able to switch off when you get home and enjoy a healthy work-life balance.

You are Modest

You're aware that confidence doesn't equal competence. It's all about closing this gap and that's why you continuously try to build on your competence.

Modest — Confident

You

On a good day you build confidence by having competence

On a bad day you could suffer from a lack of self-promotion

You succeed through

- taking nothing for granted
- being realistic about your abilities and limitations
- hiding your insecurities

You are Patient

You work to live rather than live to work. While you do work hard and put in the effort, your job is not your life. You allow opportunities at work to come to you rather than chasing them.

Patient — Achiever

You

On a good day you are satisfied with what you have

On a bad day you are not always proactive enough

You succeed through

- living in the moment
- knowing when to take things seriously or not
- learning from others as they take the first leap

You are slightly more Relaxed than Disciplined

You care about consistency and details, but you don't lose sight of the bigger picture.

Relaxed — Disciplined

You

On a good day you are good at putting things in perspective

On a bad day you may leave tasks unfinished

You succeed through

- being dependable and consistent
- your ability to let go
- careful planning

You are very Independent

Top strength

You love acting on your own accord, and are not afraid of challenging the assumptions of others. You are highly likely to take a clear stand on key matters, and are unafraid of going against the grain.

Independent — Dutiful

You

On a good day you are self-reliant and willing to take a stand

On a bad day you may seem resistant to listen to authority

You succeed through

- your self-directedness
- your initiative
- your willingness to offer alternative perspectives

Thinking

Your THINKING measures the abilities you draw upon when solving problems and ranges from Intuitive to Agile.

You approach problem-solving with your preference to rely on your past experience to find solutions; sometimes adding to this approach, an analysis of the situation. You enjoy finding more practical solutions to problems and believe that the best learning comes from experience, while also seeing where research may still have its place.

You are Intuitive

You learn through experience and you deal with problems by diving right in.

Intuitive — Agile

You

On a good day You enjoy learning by doing

On a bad day you need to be aware when more analytical thought is required

You succeed through

- having your own proven solutions
- learning on the job
- using your common sense

What are strengths?

Strengths are the ways you are most likely to behave – your strongest personality preferences. They are aspects of your personality that you use to succeed at work and as you rely on them you are more likely to start and continue developing them. High performance comes from shaping and expanding your strengths through concentrated effort and practice.

Your Strengths, Your Story

We all have our own unique strengths. Wingfinder focuses on the key factors for career success which have been identified by psychologists across thousands of scientific studies. What YOU DO to develop your strengths will make the difference.

Beware of the Dark Side

Every aspect of personality has its positives and negatives depending on the situation and being self- aware will help you succeed in your career. As your top 4 strengths are your most preferred way to behave, you may be overusing them, or there may be situations they may not be to your advantage, how they can be managed and developed is key.

You are Autonomous

You have a very clear idea about how things should be done. You enjoy having the independence to really be yourself and take control.

Keep doing

Keep being yourself. Your independent spirit means that decisions get made, work gets done and projects move forwards.

Stop doing

You have strong ideas about how things should be done, which is great. But be careful not to become so dominant that other voices can't be heard.

Start doing

It's not healthy to always follow your own ideas. Give someone else the opportunity to prove themselves by agreeing to do things their way.

Here are four ways to help you build on this strength

1. Listen to others
   Ask for other people's opinions. It's one of the most important elements of being in a group.

2. Pay attention to tone and nuance
   Pay closer attention to conversations, what people are saying and how they say it. It should inform your decisions.

3. Be prepared to compromise
   Accept that sometimes you have to make compromises for the benefit of the group.

4. Ask for feedback
   You have a strong belief in your views and how you go about things. Ask for feedback from colleagues on how you could improve your teamwork skills.

You are Focused

Far from being a daydreamer, you're very focused on what you need to do and don't like being distracted by complications.

Keep doing

Keep your sights set on the main goal or any objective at hand. Focus on the efficiency of a solution to drive the final outcome.

Stop doing

Stop shifting your focus and allow yourself the time to go deeply into the tasks you're working on. Getting right into topics may lead to better outcomes.

Start doing

Open up to new ways of approaching situations and conflicts by challenging yourself to find alternative solutions. You may find a fresh approach energising.

Here are four ways to help you build on this strength

1. Look at things from another perspective
   Avoid unnecessary conflicts by trying to see things from the other person's perspective.

2. Listen to different opinions
   Remember, in many situations you'll have the views or opinions of others. Take advantage of these perspectives before making your own mind up.

3. Consider the alternatives
   It's good to find a solution that works, but try to expand your thinking by also considering alternatives.

4. Use your experience to guide your actions
   Think about the outcomes of your decisions and conversations. When did you get the result you wanted and what approach did you use to get there?

You are Classical

You have a clear and consistent way of working. You prefer the stability and security of conformity and tradition.

Keep doing

Keep sticking to your principles. People value your consistency as they know what they can expect from you; that's why people are comfortable relying on you.

Stop doing

Sometimes, you find yourself resisting change or avoiding new opportunities. Break this habit and embrace the potential these new developments may represent.

Start doing

Actively seek the perspective of others — you'll expand your thinking and may even find the experience refreshing.

Here are four ways to help you build on this strength

1. Escape your comfort zone
   Go out of your comfort zone, even by just a step. When you try new things, new doors will open for you.

2. Switch up your entertainment
   Switch up your entertainment. Listen to a completely new kind of music. Watch a film you'd never normally see. Have some fun expanding your cultural horizons.

3. Don't be afraid of setbacks
   Experimentation is key to increasing your creativity. See each setback as an opportunity for learning that will ultimately make your end-product stronger.

4. Embrace difference
   Try to work with people you wouldn't normally work with. They'll each give you a different perspective on things.

You are Independent

You love acting on your own accord, and are not afraid of challenging the assumptions of others. You are highly likely to take a clear stand on key matters, and are unafraid of going against the grain.

Keep doing

Keep taking initiative. You enjoy working on your own and are driven by self-directed work. This means you're acutely aware of what it is that motivates you about your projects and work.

Stop doing

It's good to be independent, but do not lose track of what others are thinking, or rely too heavily on your own point of view. It's important to stay in the loop and gain the support and ideas of others in your team.

Start doing

Working alone can be a good way to focus on what needs to be done, but start actively balancing your interactions with time spent working alone. Make sure you reference other people's ideas when you explain your thinking around a problem or solution. This will help colleagues and team members buy in to your work.

Here are four ways to help you build on this strength

1. Listen to the input from others
   Try to embrace the input from others -don't ignore the views of your key stakeholders.

2. Create space for collaboration
   Focusing on your own work is great, but don't forget to invite others into your projects.

3. Seek help from others
   Take care not to isolate yourself too much – seek help from others around you.

4. Don't lose sight of the bigger picture
   Remember that your work impacts others – developing empathy and aligning expectations will build strong working relationships long-term.
